News & Insights

Supply chain staff with deep experience in conventional oil, gas, and power projects face a steep learning curve when working on renewable energy projects, particularly in choosing technologies, managing risk, and adapting to unique regulatory frameworks. The use of external experts who are knowledgeable in both thermal power and renewables can keep projects on schedule while reducing capital and operating costs.

BSI to Present on Safety-Prone Supply Chains at ADIPEC

BSI will present a Technical Paper at the Abu Dhabi International Petroleum Exhibition and Conference in November. BSI's session will focus on the important lessons to be learned from past major accidents and how to incorporate risk management into supply chain design. The presentation will cover health, safety, and environment (HSE) related assessment and risk management tools and explain how to incorporate guidelines such as the Formal Safety Assessment (IMO) and ISO 31000, and regional and contextual frameworks like the Norsok Standard S - 012 for Health, Safety and Environment (HSE), into capital project supply chain design and management.
